Call the Midwife, Season 6

It's 1962 and times are changing, from increased liberation for women to new government policies. When the rather austere Sister Ursula is appointed the new head of Nonnatus House, Sister Julienne finds herself demoted and working as an ordinary member of the staff. She is not the only one to face challenges. As they strive to help mothers cope with childbearing, disabilities, disease, and social prejudice, the midwives must make choices of their own.

The Crowd & the Cloud

Hosted by former NASA Chief Scientist Waleed Abdalati, this series takes viewers on a global tour of the projects and people on the front lines of citizen science and crowdsourcing. By observing their environment, monitoring neighborhoods, and collecting information, citizens are helping professional scientists advance knowledge while speeding up new discoveries and innovations.

SIGNS OF HOPE FOR PUBLIC MEDIA

Almost everywhere you turn, there are signs of division and disagreement across our great country, but at SOPTV we see signs of hope for public television. This small taxpayer investment pays real dividends, creating more than just high-quality television content — our shared mission is grounded in education, civic discourse, and community service.

America's public media system prepares children for school and raises the sights of adults every day in southern Oregon and northern California. It expands access to knowledge and opportunity for growth — over the air, via broadcast, on digital and mobile platforms, and in our community.

According to our viewers, PBS KIDS is the most trusted and the safest place for children to watch television. Families see it as the best use of their kids' screen time. In fact, a recent survey ranks PBS KIDS first among children's TV networks in promoting school readiness, and parents credit PBS KIDS with their children showing more positive behavior. It makes a particular difference for children in low-income and rural communities who don't have access to high-quality preschool. SOPTV is part of unifying Americans around culture, too. We've provided front-row seats to a behind-the-scenes making of "Hamilton" on Broadway, a guided tour of our planet, the stars and beyond, and immersive experiences of our nation's history and heritage through award-winning documentaries. At a time when funding for music and arts within our schools is being cut, PBS provides access to the most sought-after performances for all Americans in every community — urban, suburban, and rural.

The American people believe in federal funding for public broadcasting, and it's a bipartisan fact. You don't just have to take my word for it. One recent poll by the respected team of Hart Research (Democratic) and American Viewpoint (Republican) shows that more than 7 in 10 voters say public television is a good or excellent value for their tax dollars, on par with investments in highways, roads, and bridges. Eighty-three percent of all voters would tell Congress to look for cuts somewhere other than public television.

In the context of the federal budget, funding for public broadcasting is a drop in the bucket, representing .01 percent of total expenditures. Yet this investment provides essential seed money for communities like ours, enabling us to produce programs like Immense Possibilities, which will broadcast nationally starting next month.

In an age of increasing polarization, public media provides rare common ground for people who come from different backgrounds and have varying perspectives. If our leaders in Washington want to serve their constituents, they will act to protect this fundamental American institution and strengthen it for future generations.

Nature: Hotel Armadillo

In the heart of the Brazilian Pantanal lives an animal so elusive, few have ever seen it in the wild. Solitary, nocturnal and incredibly rare, it is the giant armadillo. David Attenborough narrates the story of this extraordinary, armoured giant and reveals how the burrows they dig create homes for hundreds of other animals.

Seed: The Untold Story

Few things on Earth are as miraculous and vital as seeds. Yet in our modern world, these precious gifts of nature are in grave danger. In less than a century of industrial agriculture, our once abundant seed diversity, painstakingly created by ancient farmers and gardeners over countless millennia, has been drastically winnowed down to a handful of mass-produced varieties. Photo: Vandana Shiva in a field outside of Navdanya's seed bank in Dehradun, India.

Refuge: Stories of the Selfhelp Home

In the late 1930s, a determined group of German-Jewish refugees left behind well-established lives and immigrated to Chicago. They created a supportive community for themselves and other German, Austrian, and Czech Jews fleeing Nazi persecution. Eventually, they founded Selfhelp, an organization providing temporary housing, food, English classes, job placement, and in 1950, a residential home for elderly emigres and Holocaust survivors.

Immense Possibilities: Does Earth Day Still Matter?

Forty-seven years ago, U.S. Senator Gaylord Nelson of Wisconsin asked a fiery 22-year-old to organize a national teach-in on America's mounting ecological crises. With that directive and a loose pre-Internet network of students and citizens, Denis Hayes put together the first Earth Day, drawing an astonishing 20 million-plus participants. Now Denis is busy organizing an Earth Day "March for Science" to remind the world how much we rely on sound science for good governance and healthy living.
