PUBLIC TELEVISION'S IMPACT

In fiscal year 2018, SOPTV and public television stations throughout the country have celebrated the 50th anniversary of the Public Broadcasting Act.

I believe we will embrace public television as the missing link in our freedoms. We will see that as it compliments commercial television, it completes the democratic process by ensuring all of our people the freedoms of expression and participation. Soon all the nations will come to know that there is a new place for excellence in our lives, a new reason to aspire, a magnificent new medium available for personal growth and fulfillment. I believe it comes down to this: now we, the people, have a choice.

— Lyndon Baines Johnson, November 5, 1967

Data from Nielsen NPower shows that

- Fifty years later, over the course of a year, 80% of all U.S. TV households — nearly 200 million people — watch public television.
- The demographic breakdown of public television's full day audience reflects the overall U.S. population with respect to race/ethnicity, education, and income.
- Nearly 8-in-10 homes in rural counties, as well as more than 3-in-4 low income homes, viewed public television content during the past season.

Data from Google Analytics reveals that each month Americans watch an average of 264 million videos across all web, mobile, and connected platforms; 61% of these streams are delivered on mobile platforms. PBS Kids delivered more than 3 billion streams that were accessed via digital devices in the past year.

Meanwhile Nielsen NPower verifies that public television stations reach more children aged 2 to 8 years old in low income homes than any other kids TV network.

And, finally PBS was second only to military defense in providing a “Good” to “Excellent” value for tax dollars.

Many thanks for supporting SOPTV and ensuring southern Oregon has access to the “best television on television” and the wide range of educational services available for our children.

With gratitude,
